The intellect, as well, has kept pace with the body in its decay. Suffering not only from the cramped physique with which it is now associated, but also from the adverse exnow associated, but also from the adverse ex-ternal conditions under which men exist, and withering too, under the decline of arts and social comforts, it has become so dwarfish in its development that little of its civilized brillancy still survives. In the pulpit sermons are heard which would not have done credit to a six year old schoolboy, when the race was in its prime. The writings and the inventions of former ages are becoming quite unintelligible. Youths at school get as far as vulgar fractions in arithmetic, or the pons asinorum in geometry, and then pull up, under the impression that their education is complete. To master a single language fully is deemed a sufficient occupation for a whole life. And when poor fallen humanity casts its eyes upon some relic of by-gone grandeur—a ruined railway, a crumbling cathedral, a dilapidated picture, a mouldering volume, which tells of the great feats the race has performed—it might well parody Swift's melancholy exclamation upon opening the "Tale of a Tub," as the shadows of lunacy were falling around him, "What a genius I must have had when I wrote that work!"

Tyranny of Rowdies in America.

A recent English traveler in this country writes home as follows: "To talk of the undue influence by landords in England over their tenants, their tenants having many an interest in common with their landlords, is a mere drop of water in the sea compared with the tyranny exer-cised by the boh-hoys' and trowdies over the freedom of universal suffrage; and when I read the lucubrations of Messrs. Bright and I read the lucubrations of Messrs. Bright and Cobden at the reform meetings, as they are called, when they hold up, I fear, the disuniting States of America as a pattern to this country, I am at a loss what to do—to marvel at the mistake of these orators, or to laugh at the impudence of the attempt to lean a weight on the most fragile lath that was ever put forth as a walking stick for John Bull. A man has but to travel in America, and to mix with all classes, to see the errors in the system of what may be called the universal suffrage of an irresponsible people. 'A king can do no wrong: sible people. 'A king can do no wrong;' that is a curtous adage, and may be a legal truth, though it can not be a religious one; and on closely regarding the law and its general enforcement in the United States, the eral enforcement in the United States, the same may be illegally said of the American people. The people can do no wrong; and that fact will, eventually, I fear, be 'the knife' that will 'sever the bundle of sticks,' though accursed ought forever to be the hand that severs the unity of a splendid citizenship that can only fall to pieces by suicide, or by an insane intoxication produced by too much liberty. Liberty is a beautiful thing in the social as well as the political or public system throughout the world; but if a man takes too great liberties in private society, liberty throughout the world; but it a man takes too great liberties in private society, liberty destroys the delicacy of life, and leads, if unchecked, to demoralization. The same result is, at this moment, hanging by a thread over the prosperity of America; the people are drunk with liberty already, to the destruction of the best of all blessings, the ample and remunerative employment of the industrial

A Close Embrace With an Indian.

A young Lieutenant of cavalry, writing from his camp in Texas to the Washington National Intelligencer, gives an account of a rencounter with a Camanche. With a party of men the officer was pursuing some thiev-ing Indians. He came up to a band and engaged with a lusty warrior, who dropped from his horse and attempted to make his escape on fopt, "but," says the Lieutenaut, "I dismounted and followed his mocassin "I dismounted and followed his mocassin track, and finally came to a little precipice, down which I saw his red blanket, which he had dropped. Clambering down that, I picked up and examined his blanket. I was then within six feet of him, and did not know it. Sceing where he had jumped down another little descent by a ledge of rocks, I jumped down also, and, in an instant he sprang upon me, leaping in the air and alighting with his breast upon my head. He had an arrow in his bow, the sharp point of which he placed against my breast, but, just as he shot I sprang one side, and the arrow passed through the sleeve of my coat. Grappling with him I wrenched his bow out of his hands, and taking my pistol, belabored him across his head and eyes. Finding, howof his hands, and taking my pistol, belabored him across his head and eyes. Finding, however, that he pressed me so tight that I could not get a chance to cock my revolver, I dropped it, and seizing him with both hands near the waist, raised him high above the ground, tripped him, and fell with my whole weight upon him; but then I was in a quandary. Here was I on top, holding down, breast upon breast, a live Camanche, and a very slippery one, with nothing to kill him with. Fortunately just then one of my men came up and assisted in holding him until could get my pistol, when I soon sent him could get my pistol, when I soon sent him to his 'happy hunting ground' to rejoin his Billody Affray in Restucky-One Man Killed and Ohrey Marly Wounded.

A most horrible rencounter took place in Powell County, (Ky.) on Saturday, on the land of Harvey Hall, between the partles, concerning a certain division fence between them. It lasted for some time, all the parties being engaged in it, and promiscuously using guns and knives. Henry Hall, son of Harvey, a young man of some nineteen years of age, was killed on the spot, by the stabe and thrusts of a knife in the hands of one of the Bowens. Old man Hall was stabbed in the throat, the knife entering the jaw, and producing a wound from which he is now lying in a critical condition.

Secret Service in the Revolution. All of the mysteries that occurred in the American Revolution, the employment of Rivington, editor of the Royal Gasette, in the secret service of the American Commander, is the most astonading.

Rivington proved faithful to his bargain, and often would intelligence of great importance, gleaned in the convivial moments at Sir William's or Sir Heney's table, be in the American camp before the convivialists had elept off the effects of their wine. The business of secret service was so well

The Ries of the Students at Rome. The Address for the Pope Torn and Burnt.

On the morning of the 6th, on the doors of the Sapianza, or Roman University, being thrown open for the admission of students, they were seen in groups shout the quadrangle, and along the lefty corriders of the gloomy palace. About a hundred of these young men, clustering together, repaired to the biblioteca, or library of the establishment, where the four promoters of the address (in behalf of the Court of Rome) had been sitting the previous days, soliciting and receiving the signatures. It so chanced that only one of the four, Maidura, was at his place at that early hour. The maleontents crowded around him to take him to task about the address, and to wrinch the paper from his hands. They upbraked him in no measured terms, and by the too easy transition from words to deeds proceeded to personal chastisement. The classor of the altercation brought round the other students by hundreds, and the loyal The business of secret service was so well managed, that even a suspicion never arose as to the medium through which intelligence of vast importance was continually being received in the American camp from the very head-quarters of the British army, and, had suspicion arisen, the King's printer would have been, probably, the last man suspected; for during the whole of his connection with the secret service, his Royal Guzette literally piled up abuse of every sort upon the American General and the cause of America.

In 1783 this remarkable mystery was solved. When Washington entered New York as conqueror, on the evacuation by the British forces, he said one morning to two of his officers, "Suppose, gentlemen, we walk down to Rivington's bookstore; he is said to be a very pleasant kind of a fellow." Amazed, as the officers were, at the idea of visiting such a man, they of course prepared to accompany the Chief. When they arrived at the bookstore, Rivington received his visitors with great politeness; for, indeed, he was one of the most elegant gentlemen and best bred men of the age. afar off huried books, rulers, and inkstands at his head. students hands and locked him up in a closet, than the rioters turned upon himself and demanded that the address should be delivered over to them. The reverend gentleman wriggled and shifted about a good deal, and tried to slip through their fingers by an assertion that the paper in question was not in his possession, and that he would have it ready for them on the morrow. "No, not no procrastination, cried the riotous youths, "to-morrow we know you will have the gendarmes here, and you will have the gendarmes here, and you will then be the stronger. To-day is our own. The Rector, however, who actually had not the address, gave his oath to that effect; promising, also upon oath, that it should be presently forthcoming. They retired. The locks on the doors of the houses of New York more than three score years ago, were not so good as now. The door of Rivington's private room closed very imperfectly, and soon became ajur, when the officers distinctly heard the chinking of two heavy purses of gold, as they were successively laid on a table.

The party soon returned from the inner room, when Rivington pressed upon his without delay.

The report of some of the youngsters that the gendarmes were at the door, raised to its highest pitch the maddened fury of their companions, who assured the Rector that if only one gendarme crossed the threshold of the place, they would fling him down from the balcony, into the stone-paved yard beneath. The Rector, hard driven, proposed to send two of the students for the long coveted address. The two young men, proceeded by a beadle, (Camillo Dognazzi,) actually went to the house of one Pogri, the man with The party soon returned from the inner room, when Rivington pressed upon his guests a glass of Madeira, which he assured them was a prime article, having imported it himself, and it having received the approbation of Sir Henry and the most distinguished bon eigents of the British army.

The visitors now rose to depart. Rivington, on taking leave of the chief, whom he escorted to the door, said: "Your Excellency may rely on my especial attention being given to the agricultural works, which, on their arrival, will be immediately forwarded to Monnt Vernon, where I trust they will contribute to your gratification smid the shades of domestic retirement." a beadle, (Camillo Doguazzi,) actually went to the house of one Poggi, the man with whom the paper was deposited, with a note from the Rector, this latter remaining in the meantime as a hostage in the hands of his captors. During that interval, Mattei, the Cardinal and Dean of the Cardinals, having business to transact with the Rector, entered the palace, and seeing that tumultuous assemblage, spoke a few words advising conciliation and order, but his feeble voice was drowned by such a squall of shouts and hisses that he was fain to beat a precipitate retreat. Rivington remained for several years New York after the peace of 1783. The Rector continued in a state of siege all the while, for all the professors and other officers of the catablishment had deserted their posts, and left him alone at the mercy of the mutineers till the two young messengers and the beadle came back with the address. Then there arose a cry that the puper should be torn to pieces, an order with which the Rector, not without many ugly grimaces, complied, taking good care, however, to The late Sir William Napier's "History of the Was in the Peninsula," has passed through several editions, and is now a standard work. Of all the wars in which Great Britain has been engaged, that war of six years was the most important, difficult and expensive, and Sir William's History is worthy of the transcomplied, taking good care, however, to pocket the pieces. The students again raised a storm to have the pieces burnt, and the auto actions it records, and the skill and heroism it celebrates. Perhaps no military history of equal excellence has ever been written. It da fe was actually consummated, amid such an uproar as the venerable walls of the Sapi-enza had never before shaken with. The noisy assemblage was then suddenly hushed— the cries of "Italy!" and "Victor Emmanst the author sixteen years of continuous labor. It was the correspondence of Joseph Bonaparte while nominally King of Spain. Sir William was in a state of perplexity, and almost in despair of being able to make any use of these valuable materials, when his wife undertook to arrange the letters according to dates and subjects, to make a table of reference, and to translate and epitomise the contents of each. Many of the most important documents were entirely-in cipher, of some letters about one-half were in cipher, and others had a few words so written interspread. All these documents and letters spread. All these documents and letters spread. All these documents and letters ing. The entire correspondence was then made available for the historian's purpose. She also made out all Sir Wm. Napier's rough interlined manuscripts, which were almost illegible to himself, and wrote out the whole work fair for the printers—it may be said three times, so frequent were the changes made. Sir William mentions these facts in the preface to the edition of 1851, and in paying this tribute to Lady Napier, observes that this amount of labor was accomplished without her having for a moment neglected the care and education of a large family.

Tant micus, think the decent minority of the Parisian population. Such orgies as are held every Saturday night and Sunday morning, at the French Imperial Academy of Music, would have excited remark in the worst days of Roman decadence. The actors in these saturnalins—or, I should say, the active participants in them—belong almost exclusively to the humblest orders of society. The wretches who crowd the floor, actived in every imaginable variety of soiled, faded and indecent garb, are barbers' apprentices, shop-boys, servant-girls, and griscites of the Latin Quarter—to go no lower. But the boxes at one are filled with idlers and strangers, who attend the masked ball because they have heard much of it, and are eager to witness and judge for themselves. Many go under the delusion that it is a Carnival festival, such as are held in other European countries, and made up of well-bred people.

Such was the delusive idea of a wealthy Russian Princess, who arrived in Paris last week, and conceived the plan of visiting the Opera-ball, disguised and masked, in order to intrigue her countrymen whom she might meet there ignored the plan of visiting the Opera-ball, disguised and masked, in order to intrigue her countrymen whom she might and would gladly have retired immediately. But retreat was, for the moment, impossible. The frightened woman was borne up the stairway by the hooting throng, only to be greeted, on the landing above, by a general shout of derision from the maskers, who, fortunately, mistook her jewels for paste, and hailed her with the epithet of "glass-blower." The deceived lady summoned all her strength to her aid, and made her way into the foyer, where she luckily soon caught sight of a familiar face, and in a moment afterward was leaning on the protecting arm of a Bussian A SULPHUR SHOWER IN THE SOUTH,-The A SULPHUR SHOWER IN THE SOUTH.—The Charleston papers notice the recurrence of a phenomenon which is called in some parts of the State the "With's Butter," and in others a "Sulphur Shower." During the high winds of spring large quantities of vegetable pollen fill the air and fall upon the ground like a fall of snow. To many it is a source of vague and superstitions fear.

leaning on the protecting arm of a Russian gentleman, who conducted her safely to her hotel, with no greater damage incurred than a terrible fright. Despenare Appracy in Missouri,—A street encounter at Jefferson City, Mo., on Saturday, between James Hughes, Deputy-Warden of the Penitentiary, and Mr. Dosier, formerly guard in the prison, resulted in the almost immediate death of both. Cause: an old grudge, aggravated by recent political differences. CHILD KILLED BY A WIRE.—On Saturday afternoon, says the Buffalo (N. Y.) Commercial, a young child, about two years old, son of Mr. Hirty, residing in the neighborhood of the Indian village church, on the Reservation, while playing with a piece of wire, about eight inches long, fell down, and the wire running into one of his eyes, penetrated the brain. The child died in twenty-five hours after the accident happened.

THE GERMAN COUNT AGAIN.—In the Criminal Court at Washington, Herman Jarowitz, alias Jenger, tried on the charge of obtaining money and other valuables on the false pretense that he was a German Count or Baron, has been found guilty. He had extensively figured in cities north of Washington. DEATH OF AN OLD SOLDIER'S WIDOW.—The Virginia papers notice the death, in Norfolk, of a Mrs. Mahaney, the widow of a soldier of the Revolution. She was over a hundred years old, and had drawn a pension for half a century. She was sufficiently active to do her own work until within a few weeks of her death. One or two children surfive her, who are themselves over three sore and ten.

Paris, March 5.—The Moniteur announces that yesterday the Minister of the United States presented his letters de eredence.

The Constitutionnel publishes an article explaining the French policy in Italy. In mentioning the solution proposed in the message of M. Thouvenal, the Constitutionnel says if it is not a Sardinian solution it is an Italian one. Sardinia will possess in Tucany an ally who will aid her to overcome the opposition of Naples and Rome, in order to constitute the Italian nation, with the concurrence of all its nationalities, and not an Italian Kingdom, absorbing everything, without considering the essential differences, opposing interests and the distrusts of Europe.
